What does the program do? It encrypts, garbles, and then deletes incoming and outgoing Internet traffic that is not expected, turning it into a meaningless stream of characters. The incoming and outgoing traffic that the user expects (and the other programs that are aware of the encryption protocol used) will not be affected. The fact that the traffic is being encrypted is not obvious to the human eye. The program can encrypt traffic under the following protocols: TCP/IP http/s https/s ftp/s The program can garble traffic under the following protocols: FTP/s HTTP/s The program can support proxies under the following protocols: HTTP/s FTP/s The program allows the user to block (blunt) outgoing and incoming Internet traffic under the following protocols: HTTP/s FTP/s The program can help with the hiding of the user's Internet Service Provider: It hides the source IP address of the user's HTTP and HTTPS requests. The program hides the browser's source IP address and the referrer site name and IP address of the originating site. The program can delete system information that the browser normally sends to the server on every request: Browser's IP address Referrer site Browser's user agent The program can delete cookies sent by the browser. The cookies that are passed via the HTTP POST method will remain, as will the cookies that are passed as an argument to an HTML form. The Cookies that are passed via GET method will be deleted when the program finds out that it is getting the cookies in a transparent way (reading them from cookies file in the browser). The program can also delete or change information that the browser normally sends to the server on every request. The program can support any protocol and any destination (destination IP address). It works as a proxy server. The program can hide the fact that it works as a proxy server (it can accept requests and directly return the content to the Internet when necessary). The program can delete or change the information that the proxy server normally sends to the destination server (destination IP address). The program can work on any operating system and can be installed on any hard drive. The program can also uninstall itself. Internet Traffic Garbler Full Crack Features: Does the program support all Internet protocols? No. Does the program support any Internet protocols? Yes.
